New Hampshire's failure to provide enough signboards is said to work to Vermont's disadvantage, or at least to the discomfort of tourists who want to get into Vermont and are allowed to lack off the right track because of the lack of signs. Tourists for Newport, Vt., and Manchester, Vt., are passed along to Newport, N. H., and Manchester, N. H., by natives who know only that there are towns of that name in their own state. Put up your signboards, New Hampshire.

The pulmotor has been tried in various places with indifferent success until it was left for a demonstration in Chicago to establish the usefulness of the new invention beyond doubt. At a recent fire on State street in that city, 50 firemen, who were overcome by smoke, were quickly revived by use of the pulmotor and within a short time were in condition to enter upon their duties. Credit is given the pulmotor for saving 50 lives, but it is probable that many, or most, of the firemen would have recovered if the regularly established methods of resuscitation had been used. Nevertheless, the pulmotor must have saved some of the 50 lives, and it must also have given the credit for doing the job quickly in all the cases. The pulmotor seems to be a valuable addition to the equipment of the fire departments in the large cities, where the firemen are subjected to grave danger, and often, because of the necessity of attacking flames at close quarters. It is even more valuable for this service than it has proven itself to be in the case of suffocation in the water, for which it was first heralded.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE APPOINTMENT.

There is no doubt of the ability of Judge George M. Powers to fill the position of chief justice of the supreme court of Vermont, to which he has just been appointed by Governor Fletcher. Judge Powers is a man of good qualifications by nature for a position on a judiciary, and he has had that qualification developed and broadened by training and considerable experience in presentation of and interpretation of the laws of Vermont. He also is a concise

VERMONT'S HUNTING LAWS.

"Protest Over the Manner of Their Interpretation."

Dear Editor:

The opening of the hunting season this fall has brought to the light of the public, and especially of the hunters, a new acquisition of powers by the state fish and game commission, acquisition which we fail to see yet by whom was granted. We thought always that the governor of the state should, biennially, with the advice of the general assembly and Senate, appoint a commissioner with powers and duties, as assigned by sections from 61 to 77. Looking over very carefully the dispositions of the above sections we find that the gentleman who is assigned commissioner by the governor has an avalanche of powers and duties that will require all his valuable time to see that the laws regarding fishing and hunting will be respected.

But it was a general surprise to discover that the game and fish commission has appropriated to himself the power of restricting the game laws voted by the general assembly, an assembly that represents the will of all the citizens of this state and which is composed of intelligent members who certainly don't need any legal interpretation of the laws by the commissioner, but only require from him the service of having the laws not infringed by anybody.

It is true that the commission has the duty to instruct the town clerks of the four hunting licenses, but seems to us that in doing so, he could not go in contradiction with the law.

The section 48 (part 6) of the general assembly law says that if the applicant is a bona fide resident he should be entitled to the hunting license at 75 cents. Who confers the power on Mr. Titcomb to change the word of the law bona fide resident into resident alien?

If the gentlemen of the general assembly had in their minds to impose the fee of $10.75 on the aliens, they would not have the need of the commissioner's interpretation upon this point and they would simply have said in the section, alien, and not bona fide residents.

But the general assembly intelligently knew that the bona fide residents, who contribute, with their daily work, and with their expenditures as regular residents, to the wealth and to the development of the Vermont industries, had right to have the hunting license for 75 cents; and the following part of the section which fixes the license of $10.75 was intended for the non-residents of this state, who came up in Vermont for 15-day sport during the open hunting season and specially for the deer season, living and paying taxes for the rest of the year in some other state.

How could the state commissioner explain the contradiction which he put himself in when he orders the town clerks to give to the resident aliens a hunting license at $10.75, with printed heading, Non-Resident License?

How can the town clerk collect taxes from anyone who holds a non-resident license? We are bound to think, by this game law incident, that the state commissioner has been influenced by a small congregation of narrow-minded citizens, who like to get all the financial benefits of the residence of the aliens in Vermont, and in the meantime they feel blue to see that they should have a fair chance in fishing and hunting in this state as they have. If this is the case, why not bind the representatives of the general assembly to vote a state game law, as existing today in Pennsylvania? "No alien can carry a gun in his possession in this state." Hunting is free for any alien in Pennsylvania.

These two sections will, without any doubts, satisfy the state commissioner and all his confidential advisors.

Yours truly,
A Bona fide Resident.

WATERBURY.

Dillingham grange of Duxbury had a very helpful public meeting last Saturday evening at their hall. The regular opening exercises of the grange were held and business transacted. Then the doors were thrown open and the waiting guests and speakers welcomed. The program was in charge of Judge E. W. Hunt, who introduced the speakers. Past District Deputy Arthur Matham of Shady Hill was the first speaker and gave much of encouragement for the order. Rev. W. E. Douglass made himself very welcome by his pleasant and kindly spirit, as well as the many good thoughts which he expressed. Superintendent Norman Frost of the Waterbury, Duxbury and Middlesex union gave a helpful address with some good points along school matters. Supt. Frost had visited every school in Duxbury that week and had found only 41 out of the 102 scholars properly seated. The three principal things which make for proper seating are as follows: Height of seat, height of desk, and distance of desk from seat. The speaker told how these conditions could be remedied without much trouble or great expense, and the school board seem very willing indeed to co-operate in this matter. He was questioned somewhat, which brought out a strong plea for better sanitary arrangements, although he said those of Duxbury were as good as the average. Throughout the evening, musical numbers were given, consisting of a flute solo by Miss Annie Dorothy Palmer, violin solo by Rev. W. L. Belmont, and a vocal solo by Mrs. James Collins, also orchestra numbers by Raymond Buzzell, violinist and leader, Stanley Buzzell, trombone, Harry Irish, cornet, and Annie Palmer, flute, with Mrs. Palmer, accompanist. This was the first appearance of the orchestra and their work was well received and much gratitude given the Messrs. Buzzell for their presence and help.

Among those who attended the state fair from this place were Mrs. C. H. Robinson and daughter, Claudia, Mrs. Orrin Kimball and daughter, Addie, and a number of others.

Mrs. E. A. Cooper spent a day in Montpelier last week.

Miss Carrie Streeter was in Northfield Wednesday.

Miss Alice Gove has returned from Chelsea, Mass., and is employed in Montpelier.

The ladies' aid will give a vegetable dinner in their hall next Friday evening, Sept. 26, to be served from 6 to 8.

Rev. L. O. Sherburne spent Saturday afternoon at the summer cottage of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Dresser and was entertained Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Leonard.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Hewitt spent a day in Montpelier last week.

Miss Madge Moody was in Northfield Saturday.

WILLIAMSTOWN.

The joint board of directors of the Chelsea-Williamstown union district met here Saturday to elect a superintendent to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of J. Allen Hunter. A large number of applications had been received and after due consideration, choice was made of Leonard C. Smith of Morrisville, a graduate of Middlebury college and experienced in all grades of school work. He was for a time the principal of the graded school at Hardwick. Mr. Smith is to come this week and begin his work.

Mrs. Fred C. Graves of Colorado Springs, Col., arrived in town last week for a visit of several weeks to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. House.

Mrs. Glen McAllister returned Thursday from a stay of several days in the family of Rev. Jesse Martin of Fairmount, Mass.

Edward Royce has moved from the house now owned by Mr. Elsworth on the road to Chelsea to the Vassar house on the road to Barre.

Town Clerk McAllister was not able to attend to business the last two days of last week, having an attack of the prevailing distemper.

To All Who Are Interested

As it has been reported that the city water system was helping the McFarland & Boyce system during the present drought, we wish to say that this report is incorrect, as our supply is more than double our consumption and always is.

Anyone located along our line of pipes wishing to connect with our system can be accommodated.

Furthermore, during the present water trouble, all are cordially invited to go to our system for water for drinking purposes where it is agreeable to our patrons.

CURRENT COMMENT

Temporary Decency.

A correspondent, writing from San Francisco, proudly calls the attention of a contemporary to the fact that "we in this city are wiping out our worst dives in preparation for the Panama-Pacific exposition."

The work is a commendable one, but why was it deferred until the present time? If it is possible for San Francisco to suppress its "worst dives" as a preliminary to inviting the world to visit that city, why would it not be a good idea to close its worst dives and all its dives for all time, in concession to decent sentiment?

However, if the authorities of San Francisco shall demonstrate prior to and during their exposition that dives can be closed and kept closed, perhaps they will be induced to do their duty after the show is over.—Boston Traveler.

Rutland's Big Watershed.

"Rutland and Barre have city water problems which are very much alike; both face the need of securing a greater supply to meet the constant growth of the two cities in population and manufacturing industries. If Barre and Rutland were standing still, their present supplies might be sufficient, provided the water were properly conserved, but Barre and Rutland are not standing still. The two cities are gaining in population and industries, which causes an increased demand for water supply each year. Neither has a water shed large enough to meet and considerable growth."—Barre Times.

The contemporary states the case exactly—with the sole exception of its concluding sentence, as far as it pertains to Rutland. This city has an available water shed sufficient for a city of a hundred thousand population, at least. We refer to the whole Mendon valley, of which only a small part is utilized now.

It doesn't take much of a prophet to foresee that the time will come when the entire valley or basin at the east will be required for the Greater Rutland. It may be in ten years; it may be in twenty-five years. But, whenever the time, Rutland has conveniently at hand a magnificent available supply of the best water that runs down hill, adequate for many years to come.—Rutland News.

If Good for Maine, Why Not for Vermont?

The state of Maine, in common with the rest of New England, is active in the work of public highway improvement, and shows its good judgment by confining its work to the betterment of its trunk lines, or in other words to those roads that have the greatest measure of public travel. To further aid in this work of highway improvement and to bring about the greatest possible distribution of its cost, Gov. Haines is out with a proposition that the state issue bonds for highway construction, and that, too, in small denominations, and that, in small savings may invest and become a creditor of the state; and further, that by the means of this proposed bond issue the burden of their cost is not forced upon the present-day people, but a portion of the cost is passed along to the man of to-morrow. This already is the plan in New Hampshire and in Massachusetts, and in other states.

While no one is opposed to good roads in Vermont still, it is but fair and just to the man of small means not to make this road tax a positive burden. Last year every man, woman and child in the state paid a tax of three dollars for highway construction and maintenance.

The issuance of bonds would permit the payment of this cost over a series of years, and as a properly built road should last for years, then should the

THE NEW GOLF STAR.

It took iron nerves and great will power to accomplish what young Francis Oumet of Brookline, Mass., did last Saturday when he defeated two of the most experienced veterans of the game of golf in a most decisive manner. It takes a firm nerve and splendid control of the will, coupled with mastery of the muscles, to send a little white ball rolling over several yards of turf and then to drop into an artificial receptacle, the mouth of which seems hardly larger than the ball itself when looked at from where the effort started. And to do that while thousands of spectators watch the performance, and while knowing that the thousands of spectators are on tip-toe of excitement and are only holding in their excitement by great self-restraint—to run the little ball down into the hole in the smooth green under those conditions is a feat which is not easily accomplished. But that is what 20-year-old Francis Oumet did time after time on Saturday, just as he had done on Friday, showing that his victory was not a flash in the pan, but was a victory well earned. He played shoulder to shoulder with two of the greatest exponents of the game of golf as ever known, Vardon and Ray of Great Britain, men who had gone through innumerable hard contests and who thus had the benefit of long experience, together with great skill and steadiness. The young Bay State was up against extremely hard competition, but he acquitted himself well and he deserves the title of open golf champion of the United States for the 1913 season. He is young yet and only an amateur, but he seems to have a remarkable future in a sport which is constantly gaining ground in many countries and particularly so in the United States.
